

SIR EDWARD NEWENHAM
HAVING PROCURED SOME OF THE
PRINTED REPORTS OF THE SECRET COMMITTEE
OF THE
BRITISH HOUSE OF COMMONS,

THINKS he is only doing his duty to his country, by making them as public as he can in the city and neighbourhood of Hereford. For this purpose, one Copy is left at the Mitre Coffee-Room, one at the New Inn, (where Mr. Green has been so kind as to appropriate a room from eight o'clock until two,) and another may be had at Sir EDWARD's house, in St. Owen's-street, on any person sending a ticket with their name.

This authentic and valuable Report wants no comment: Britons will see the imminent danger with which their happy Constitution in Church and State was threatened—they will see how nearly they were about to experience the Sovereignty of Tyranny, with the horrors of anarchy and infidelity, instead of legal authority and the mild influence of religion. But, is it not equally astonishing and degrading, that there should exist a BRITON born who can wish to fraternize with the regicides of France? or that any one who bears that name, from the highest Peer to the poorest peasant, should be so base and degenerate, such an alien to his country, as to aid, by word or deed, in making her a tributary state to France?—Let us hope, however, that such traitors are not numerous, and that there are very few among us, comparatively speaking, who would not hazard their lives and property to prevent the tri-coloured Flag of France from riding triumphant o'er the Wooden Walls of Old England;* but that Britain, true to herself, will preserve that dignified rank she now so deservedly holds among the nations, and baffle both the open and secret attempts of all her enemies. Let us, likewise, hope that her Continental Allies, sensible of their own interests, their present and future safety, as well as the danger of any longer temporizing with the faithless Tyrants of France, will exert their united efforts in the present important, and, perhaps, decisive campaign—Then may we expect to see that inordinate ambition and despotic system, so cruelly manifested in their infamous conduct against those free and happy Republics, the small Democratic Cantons of Switzerland, (where frugal industry, peace and plenty, had reigned for 300 years,) crushed, and the blessings of peace restored.
